CURRENT RESEARCH FOCUS

My research feeds into a broad understanding of human environmental adaptations, the development of agricultural systems, and cultural exchange, while building on models that link the emergence of complex social traits with agricultural intensification. Methodologically, I implement a range of paleoethnobotanical techniques, relying heavily upon macrobotanical remains. I have directed paleoethnobotanical studies across Asia, from Mongolia in the northeast to Turkmenistan in the southwest as well as East Asia, Europe, and North America.

CURRENT STATUS

I am the Paleoethnobotany Laboratory Director at the Max Planck Institute for the Science of Human History, and have recently finished my position as a Visiting Research Scholar through the Institute for the Study of the Ancient World and New York University.

RESEARCH POSITIONS AND FELLOWSHIPS

Laboratory Director of the Paleoethnobotany Laboratory at the Max Planck Institute for the Science of Human History (Max-Planck-Institut für Menschheitsgeschichte)	2016 – Present

- Project Paleoethnobotanist for the site of Ojakly in the Kara Kum of Turkmenistan, principle investigators Lynne Rouse and Barbara Cerasetti. Excavations at Ojakly and subsequent analyses were funded by NSF Grant No. 1036942, Wenner-Gren Grant No. 8157, the George F. Dales Foundation, and the International Research & Exchanges Board IARO Grant program. As an extension of this project I am analyzing material from sites 1211 and 1219, excavated under the directorship of Maurizio Cattani 2010 – 2015
- Worked as the Project Paleoethnobotanist and excavator at the Tuzusai excavation in Kazakhstan. The excavation was conducted by the Kazakh-American Talgar Archaeological Project under the directorship of Claudia Chang. Archaeobotanical research was funded by NSF (2010-2011), Grant Number 1010678 “Doctoral Dissertation Improvement Grant: Plant Use and Domestic Economy Among Eurasian Mobile Pastoralists: Semirech’ye, Kazakhstan, during the Bronze and Iron Age Interface”, PI/Co-Pi: M. Frachetti and R.N. Spengler III 2009 – Present
- Worked as part of the Dzhungar Mountains Archaeological Project during two field seasons. In the Semerich’ye region of southeastern Kazakhstan, I conducted macrobotanical studies using floatation, surface survey, and excavation. The project is directed by Michael Frachetti and is partially funded by NSF, Grant Number 0211431 “Dzhungar Mountains Archaeological Project”, principle investigator Michael D. Frachetti 2007 – Present
- Studied classical and Medieval history in Rome, Italy and at the Vatican as part of an honors contract through the University at Buffalo. “Medieval Catholic Pilgrimages to Rome” a study of the early Christian practice of pilgrimages to Rome 2005
- Honors Thesis - a procedural thesis showing the validity and importance of the early acetolysis techniques in modern archeology. Conducted palynological analysis on two Danish archeological sites during the summer of 2005. The sites were being excavated under the funding of NSF, Grant Number SBR-0314407, “Decentralized Societies and the Development of Secondary States”, Principle Investigator Tina L. Thurston 2003 – 2006

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

I have prepared and presented dozens of lectures on a wide range of topics over the past seven years. I have held teaching assistantship positions at Washington University in St. Louis, Free University, Berlin, and New York University. My experience includes running laboratory sessions, lecturing to undergraduates, leading seminars, advising graduate and undergraduate students in office hours, and directing methods courses in the field and in the laboratory. I have considerable experience teaching, and three full courses prepared and ready to implement.
